of small business loans that are in default are through the roof. That should be a red flashing light for this economy. [If] small businesses can't service their debt, then they're not going to be long for this world, and if they start falling like dominoes, it's going to be a real problem for this economy.

“We have an America that works great for a thinner and thinner slice at the top, and it's not working for much of anyone else.”

—Sen. Elizabeth Warren

Leading up to the last Democratic debate, a lot of the buzz and promotion was Warren versus Bernie Sanders. So what is a key major policy difference between you and Sen. Sanders?

I'm not here to try to define somebody else's policy. I can tell you what I'm fighting for. The best part of these debates is when we get a chance to do that. We have an America that works great for a thinner and thinner slice at the top, and it's not working for much of anyone else. Our government in Washington has been captured by money. And it's far more than just political contributions. It's lobbyists, bought-and-paid-for experts, think tanks. Washington is flooded with money, and every decision that gets made there is influenced by that money. And day by day, decision by decision, the government does just a little bit more in favor of the wealthy and the well-connected and against everyone else. I believe we can turn that around. I believe we can make this government work, not just for those at the top, but make it work for everyone.
