

The truth is out there

Re "Space invaders" (The Conspiracy Issue, by Matt Bieker, Sept. 19):

Kudos to the CN&R for publishing an article about recent activity around Area 51 in Nevada. Matt Bieker has written for the paper on many diverse topics, but I could find no others on ufology in his author archive. He has done a good job with the limitations of this article, delving into the history of Area 51 and its secrecy.

The 2018 documentary he mentions, Bob Lazar: Area 51 and Flying Saucers, is certainly revealing about Lazar's work on an anti-gravity propulsion system at the base in 1989. There are two recent films, also by Jeremy Corbell, that expose details of Lazar's examination of a basketball-sized anti-gravity device taken out of a crashed saucer. One is called Anatomy of a Flying Saucer and the other is Behind the Scenes.

Everything Lazar has said about his work at Area 51 has come across as a sincere effort to explain the advanced technology he witnessed and its implications for all earthlings. Efforts to debunk his story have fallen away as the consistency of Lazar's testimony has held up over 30 years.

Thomas Carey and Donald Schmitt's 2013 book, Inside the Real Area 51, offers the history of Wright-Patterson Air Force Base in Dayton, Ohio. This is where extra-terrestrial beings are being kept.

Way to go, CN&R, on depicting us conspiracy theorists as sci-fi wackjobs and Area 51 groupies! A conspiracy is a "confederacy formed for the purpose of committing by their joint efforts, some unlawful or criminal act." Does this sound familiar in the wake of the media storm surrounding POTUS and his disregard for constitutional law and common sense?

A more obvious government conspiracy came to light in 2013 when Edward Snowden revealed the National Security Agency had been collecting everybody's digital data from computers and cellphones. His whistle-blowing efforts resulted in a Supreme Court decision denying this meta-data collection by U.S. spy agencies.

The gorilla-in-the-room of all conspiracies currently altering the entire biosphere is climate engineering. Many of you have looked up to see our once deep-blue skies to see only a silvery blue haze and often crisscrossed with jet trails. The origins of this activity above our heads is the U.S. military, as outlined in its mission statement in the early 1960s to control the weather by 2025.
